ITIDAROD HISTORIC TRAIL ALLIANCE
TRAIL ▪ STORY ▪ STEWARDSHIP

The Tripod

Fall 2025

The Iditarod Historic Trail Alliance promotes awareness of the Iditarod National Historic Trail and its gold rush and Alaska Native heritage by encouraging education programs and historical research, assisting in the protection, improvement, maintenance and marking of the Trail, and developing partnerships that foster stewardship, commitments, and support.

New Trail, Bridge near Moose Pass

This summer, Chugach National Forest completed work in the Victor Creek area, south of Moose Pass. They constructed 2.5 miles of new trail and a bridge. They also reconstructed 2 miles of existing trail, making it much more user friendly and sustainable for future maintenance needs. This work is part of the Moose Pass Trail segment of the INHT Southern Trek. When complete, the Moose Pass Trail will be 15 miles long, and lead from the Moose Pass townsite to Snow River.

Victor Creek Trail, which heads east from Milepost 20 of the Seward Highway, connects hikers to this segment of the north-south Moose Pass Trail. From the junction, head south towards Snow River or north towards Ptarmigan Campground. The newly built trail travels through a spruce/hemlock forest with intermittent views over Kenai Lake and the surrounding peaks. A particular highlight is a new 105' bridge over Victor Creek, just south of the junction with Victor Creek Trail. The bridge is over an impressive canyon with views in all directions. The section of new trail north of Victor Creek Trail currently dead ends at a small waterfall, but work is underway to extend it further.

AMERICA 250

2026 is America's 250th birthday. Events all across the country will be celebrating our heritage as a nation. The Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race Ceremonial Start has been selected by BLM as its featured America 250 celebration event for Alaska! Watch for details about how to celebrate with us, coming soon.

Tracking the Typhoon

In October 2025, Typhoon Halong devastated Western Alaska and displaced an estimated 1,800 people. Unlike what happened during Typhoon Merbok in 2022, it appears this time the Iditarod National Historic Trail escaped the worst damage, which mostly occurred in Southwest Alaska, farther south than where the Trail reaches the coast. We are continuing to collect reports of the impact and will support rebuilding the Trail where needed.

New 1-mile Trail in Chugiak

Beach Lake Park in Chugiak-Eagle River has a new multi-use trail along the Iditarod National Historic Trail! Maps show an original Iditarod route that went across the middle of the frozen Beach Lake. The new 1-mile trail parallels the west side of the lake, ending at Cook Inlet near the mouth of Fire Creek. Mushing trails in the vicinity were also improved, with guidance from the local dog mushers association, and relocated in places to accommodate the new multi-use trail.

This trail is part of an ongoing effort to extend Anchorage's Coastal Trail to the north. Spectacular views along the lakeside and at the inlet viewing platform will certainly make this wide, flat trail a popular destination for all ages and abilities.

Around the Trail

A 5-kilometer foot race - dogs welcome! - was named in honor of lifelong Iditarod advocate Dan Seavey. The route included the first mile of the Iditarod National Historic Trail, known as Mile 0 for its famous milepost on the coast in Seward, Alaska.

Iditarod Trail Committee, host of the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race, celebrated the race's first inductees into the Iditarod Hall of Fame at the Alaska Aviation Museum in October. The history of the race and the history of Iditarod National Historic Trail are permanently linked. Of course the name "Iditarod" has been made famous by the race, but also because many of the same people who started the race in 1973 were instrumental in getting the Historic Trail designated by Congress in 1978, including Joe Redington, Sr. and Dan Seavey.
